Who do you learn from in RRISD?

Chris Nieto

Coordinator
Professional Development

When sharing your knowledge and experience with others, what is one thing you always try to keep in mind?

It's important to me that I gather as much information about the audience before any training or presentation. This allows me to better understand their needs and/or goals for learning so I can adjust whatever I am sharing to be relevant, applicable, and meaningful.

What resource do you access most often for your own learning?

I am an avid reader and subscribe to a lot of e-newsletters that provide me an array of articles to read based on my areas of interest. After reading the articles, I save and tag the articles in my Evernote account so I can access in the future.

Name one thing you've learned recently that you're really excited to share with others.

Over the last two years, I have focused on better managing my time and attention by being more organized and "finding a home" for things. I use my Google Calendar for all my activities and Evernote to capture and store ideas, articles, and learning resources.

What is a life hack that has changed your life?

I am absolutely fascinated with user experience design because the designer is constantly evaluating activity through a framework of what the user is thinking, doing, and feeling. How might this look for training or teaching? How can we design someone's learning experience using this approach? Those would be some fun discussions to have.

Who is someone you learn from?

I learned from my family that everyone has value and has wisdom to share. I carry that belief in how I interact with others and constantly put myself in a learner's mindset and remain curious. In addition, I love to learn from my own two daughters. They're amazing!
